

L.A. Police to Start Rigid Enforcement of License Law

A more rigid enforcement policy with regard to the proper display of license plates on all vehicles will be started immediately, according to the Los Angeles Police Department.

Deputy Chief Harold W. Sullivan, commander of the Traffic Bureau, pointed out that the use of trailer hitches on passenger cars and station wagons has become more and more prevalent in recent years and that many such installations are illegal.

When trailer hitches are so located as to obstruct a clear view of the rear plate the plate must be relocated in such a manner as to comply with the law. Some drivers have been guilty of further violation by bending rear plates to accommodate trailer hitches or by cutting out center sections of the plate. Such mutilated and unserviceable plates must be replaced at the car owner's expense.

The law (Sect. 158 V.C.) requires one license plate on the front and one on the rear of all motor vehicles except motorcycles and power cycles, ored, tinted plastic, or glass covers for license plates are illegal when these in any way obscure plates from view or are installed in such a way as to make them less legible. Failure to illuminate rear license plates at night is a violation of the law. This illumination must be adequate to make plates legible at a distance of 50 feet. Car owners who relocate plates or recess them into rear deck covers often overlook this requirement of the law.
